RDC allocates another $250K for PACE

Move to help sustain revitalization momentum

BY BOB DEMAREE

Madison's Redevelopment Commission on Tuesday allocated another $250,000 to fund the city's PACE (Preservation and Community Enhancement Grant) program in 2021.

Nicole Schell, director of planning for the City of Madison, said that without that approval just $17,000 in PACE funding remained for 2021 but the $250,000 allocation should provide funding through the remainder of the year.

"This is a program that has really worked," said Madison Mayor Bob Courtney. "You can see the trends. We're getting a greater multiple for our investment."

Schell outlined PACE investment by the City of Madison and the Redevelopment Commission over the last three years. In 2019, $97,000 was provided with more than $162,000 in improvements matched by property owners. In 2020, Schell said funding was increased significantly to more than $658,000 which was matched by over $1 million by property owners — a ratio of $2.49 for every dollar the city contributed. To date in 2021, Schell said the $442,000 that has been funded has been matched by almost $1.5 million in private investment for a $3.35 per dollar match to the city's contribution.

Furthermore, Courtney noted that the revitalization has been targeted to have the most impact.

"We wanted to have dilapidated structures preserved and not demolished" so that they can be contributing assets back on property tax rolls. He also said that during COVID-19, the PACE program was used as a "leading indicator to get us out of a down economy. That has also been facilitated. This is certainly something that is part of the Redevelopment Commission's primary redevelopment plan, and it is something that is creating great leverage ratio for the city and county dollars."

He said the county's involvement is through an interlocal agreement in which the county contributes to the city's PACE program from the county's preservation funds.

Courtney said the city has the funding to support the additional allocation for PACE in 2021. "We just received the first draw for the tax revenue," he said. "Let's continue to expand this program because it is raising property values, eliminating blight and improving safety across our community."

He added that PACE is "spurring the right type of investment. We've facilitated more reinvestment in dilapidated and targeted revitalization areas in the last year-and-one-half than in the first six or seven years of the program combined."

With dozens of people attending to provide input on applications for a $1 million expansion of Lanthier Winery in downtown Madison and an animal swap meet at The Farm on North K Road in the Madison buffer zone on the hilltop, Monday's Board of Zoning Appeals meeting in Madison was a packed house with an overflow crowd. The winery application was denied while the animal swamp meet was approved with conditions.

BZA denies Lanthier Winery, OKs The Farm animal swaps

BY MARK CAMPBELL

Madison's Board of Zoning Appeals considered a couple of polarizing issues Monday night when applications for an expansion of a winery in downtown Madison and an animal swap meet on North K Road in the hilltop buffer zone came before the BZA.

The eventual four-hour meeting began before a packed house at Madison City Hall with the BZA first denying a setback variance that would have potentially allowed Lanthier Winery to construct and operate a $1 million manufacturing and warehouse facility on a lot adjoining that site. About half of the crowd departed after that discussion, and city hall quickly refilled most of its seats before a two-hour debate leading to approval of a conditional use application for The Farm to operate an animal swap meet on the third Saturday of the month through October as somewhat of a trial run before reviewing renewal of that application in 2022.

Both applicants appeared with legal representation presenting formal proposals with each leading to passionate testimony both for and against the requests. In the end, the BZA ruled that the winery expansion clearly did not fit zoning regulations in terms of lot setbacks but, perhaps more importantly, the proposal to expand manufacturing and warehousing at the site — zoned Heavy Manufacturing (M-2) — was probably contrary to a city trend toward converting more sites zoned manufacturing in downtown Madison into residential housing and park lands as opposed to the coal yards and scrap yards that once occupied those spaces before they went out of business and the land was reclaimed.

Later, the BZA ruled in favor of The Farm and owner Susan Smith, citing a lack of documented evidence that the animal swap meet would pose as many problems as neighbors have raised after other events at the property and giving the operation four dates in 2021 to prove otherwise under tightly-restricted guidelines. The Farm started holding flea markets at the site earlier this year until the city asked for and received a preliminary injunction on May 21 for Smith to cease operation until going through proper application procedures.

Left: Several The Farm supporters showed up at Monday's Madison Board of Zoning Appeals meeting wearing T-shirts promoting the Madison Indiana Animal Swap & Flea Market that had been held illegially at the North K Road site in the past. The Board granted a conditional use permit that will allow The Farm to hold animal swap — but no flea markets or camping — at the site on the third Saturday of each month through October.

LANTHIER WINERY

The winery, located at 123 Mill Street and owned by C.A.T. Property Management LLC principals Chris Lanthier and Tammy Hagemier, was before the BZA to request a variance from development standards in order to build a 9,600-square-foot, approximately $1 million metal manufacturing and warehousing building at an adjoining property recently purchased at 701 West First Street.

Indiana's Music City sound check

CHARLIE ROHLFING
CHARLIE'S BEAT

"Check, check! One, two, three."

It's a ritual for every musician as they get ready for a live show, to check the mic levels and make sure everything is ready. As Madison gets ready to go live with Indiana's Music City, it's worth taking a moment to check where we are, and think about what we need to do to make it a success.

First of all, just be clear, Madison already IS Indiana's Music City. No other small town (or most larger towns for that matter) possess the wealth of musical talent and committed venues that we do. Ask any out-of-town visitor and they will exclaim that what we have is unique and magical.

That being said, we need more people beyond our city limits to know about what we have, and we need more people making regular trips here to enjoy it. That's what Indiana's Music City is all about. It's a powerful new brand identity that we are going to spread far and wide.

From now on, when somebody from Indy or Cincy or Louisville hears the name Madison, we want them saying, "Oh yeah, that's that great music town, right?!" That strong brand identity will drive everything, from economic development to enhanced quality of life.

So how do we get there from here? And what can you do, dear loyal readers of The Madison Courier newspaper, to help make this vision a reality?

In other business:

• Courtney updated that the city plans to submit its proposal to Our Southern Indiana Regional Development Authority by July 20 as part of the Regional Economic Acceleration and Development Initiative (READI) in which up to $50 million will be provided to 10 regions throughout the state. Wheatley Group, a economic development strategy consulting firm, is assisting the city in developing a plan.

"We're still working through that plan," said Courtney. "We had a lot of community-based economic development in the past year that is beyond the concept stage that can be rolled into this plan."

Courtney said the city will do two submissions. "One will be workforce related and the other will be destination development related," he said, noting the city has eight to 10 development priorities that will be incorporated into the plan and submitted. He said most of the workforce development is tied to the hilltop with the development destination proposal mostly downtown, although he did not offer specific on what the plans might entail.

• Schell provided an update on a review of the city's sidewalks in which the Redevelopment Commission had provided funds to hire HWC Engineering of Indianapolis to conduct an analysis. She said the ratings show nine miles of the city's 40 miles of sidewalks are in good to excellent condition, 21 miles in good condition, and nine miles in fair or poor condition. "This gives us a good starting place where sidewalks need to be replaced, but this also shows us where there are not sidewalks and where we may have the ability to add those," Schell said.

Courtney said that in the past sidewalk repair has been done on an informal basis rather than following a strategic plan.

"We've probably only spent $40,000 to $50,000 on sidewalks when we have a beautiful 19th century community, but we have a lot of 19th century conditioned sidewalks," he said. "We felt we needed to be more sophisticated and targeted" about how the city tackles American Disabilities Act (ADA) issues with the sidewalks along with making the community more pedestrian friendly "because that's all about quality of life."

Courtney said, "We tried to take all our sophisticated knowledge we have about streets, and try to apply that same concept to sidewalks. That's never been done in Madison before."

He said the city is "trying to be more strategic about where we invest our money," and data from the sidewalk study provides the ability to develop a strategy. "We now know that in order for us to repair our poor and failing sidewalks over the next two years it would take about $1 million," and even though Madison may not necessarily be able to invest that much "we definitely need to make sidewalks downtown and on the hilltop a priority."

• Approved up to $35,000 for the Madison Municipal Airport to construct a new waterline into the terminal area to provide better fire protection. Brent Spry, airport manager, said there is currently a 4-inch waterline, which a flow test determined to be inadequate since a 6-inch line is needed. "The fire hydrant no longer meets code and obviously no longer has adequate flow," he said.

Courtney said he supported the appropriation based on safety and future development. "This $35,000 water infrastructure project is necessary for fire safety, but also helps to facilitate the continued growth and expansion of our airport," he said.

According to the applicant, the expansion is needed in order to keep up with growth and demand at the 25-year-old winery. The building and equipment that would be located there would allow the company to meet its needs both as a wine-maker and distiller but the shape, size and fact that the lot is located in the city's flood plain would require smaller setbacks than established guidelines.

Several adjoining property owners attended the meeting to challenge the application with neighboring home owner Charles Ricketts voicing the bulk of the opposition. Ricketts noted that the height and size of the structure would negatively impact his and other properties and the manufacturing processes and noise the business could create would be a hardship on the neighborhood as well as the nearby Lanier Mansion State Historic Site and both the county tourism center and local historical museum directly just across Mill Street.

BZA Chairman Scott Baldwin said the application hinged on the fact that the proposed building did not meet setback requirements for the manufacturing zone but he went further to point out recent decisions by the city to rezone other nearby properties from manufacturing to residential and park lands are indication that the city's elected leaders have different plans for the redevelopment of such areas along the Ohio River.

Those supporting the winery's application noted that was not the case several years ago when the city approved an expansion of Royer Corporation on the north side of the downtown.

"We were concerned but since Royer had a metal building there for years and most of their employees live downtown and walk to work, that has not changed the complexion of the neighborhood," said Jan Vetrhus, a former city council member who owns property near Royer. She said Lanthier's proposed metal manufacturing building could be a much starker contrast in a neighborhood that is a block from a state historic site that is one of the city's top tourism draws.

For the most part those who opposed Lanthier's application consider the existing winery operation — and tourist destination — a good neighbor. The property is well maintained, has colorful gardens with flowers that bloom throughout the warm months and holiday decorations in the fall and winter. But the proposed 80 foot by 120 foot metal building, as well as the removal of trees that would be necessary for construction, would change the look of the neighborhood and the potential sound problems and alleged risk of fire from the distillery operation were also a concern.

At the conclusion of the hearing, the BZA conducted its findings of fact — the process where the BZA assesses whether various conditions have been met to either approve or reject an application — and the proposal scored overwhelmingly toward denial. The BZA members' vote was also 4-0 in opposition with member Nancy Burkhardt absent.

After the hearing and vote, Chris Lanthier briefly address the BZA and audience a final time, thanking the BZA for its consideration of the application but disputing earlier remarks that the distillery operation would pose a fire hazard for neighbors.

"That's totally false. The notion that it is not safe is false," Lanthier said. "I'm sorry you feel it is unsafe but that's just not the case ... I don't believe that whatever I was going to do there or do there is unsafe."

THE FARM

Attorney Michael Gillenwater, of Jeffersonville, said over the past six years property owner Susan Smith has allowed her 94-acre farm on North K Road to host a concert, off-road vehicle events with a track and mud pit, weddings, birthday parties, camping, serve as a holiday venue and an animal swap meet and flea market that her family and other families both locally and from a wider region enjoy.

He said it's been a learning process but that Smith does not charge admission or a fee for booth space, doesn't allow alcohol or guns and maintains a family-friendly atmosphere.

Meanwhile, neighboring property owners and residents who oppose The Farm have cited loud noise, drinking, bonfires, gunfire and heavy traffic on the narrow county road at numerous events over a period of years in an area zoned for agriculture and residential as proof why the site should be a farm and not The Farm.

In addition, past activities at The Farm have been held without any city approval in the form of a conditional use permit issued by the BZA. The group's continued indifference to that legal process ultimately led to court action by the city in May in which an injunction was granted in Jefferson Circuit Court halting the animal swap and flea markets. Although Smith or some of her associates have been before the BZA a couple of times in the past seeking a conditional use permit — with neighbors showing up to object — she had never completed the process until Monday night.

Baldwin, the BZA chairman, said Monday that Smith's current application for a conditional use permit would be considered on its merits and not past issues at The Farm. He said while several neighbors have complained about what takes place at The Farm — and voiced their opposition again Monday — there has been little documentation, as required by the BZA when it considers applications, to support those allegations.

"We want to specifically know exactly what you want to do and how it falls under specific categories for conditional use," said Baldwin, adding that he thought the BZA was willing to forget about the past and consider the merits of the request because "I get the sense that you want to do things the right way now ... I'm aware of the issues in the past but what we are dealing with is the swap meet."

Although the event had been advertised on social media as an animal swap meet, petting zoo and flea market in the past, moving forward Smith can no longer allow flea market vendors because the property is not zoned for such use.

Under terms of the motion adopted Monday, The Farm will be allowed to host an animal swap and petting zoo on the third Saturday in July, August, September and October from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. The event must follow a site plan the group submitted Monday and while food vendors will be allowed, flea market, parts swaps, or antique sales will not be allowed. In addition, there can be no alcohol, guns, amplified music, fireworks or camping permitted on the property and organizers will have to file an emergency action plan with the appropriate authorities and follow all relevant health and safety laws.

First relationship post-abuse

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I was in a very controlling and abusive relationship from the time I was 15 until three years ago, when my ex passed away. We were both in our late 30s at the time.

After he died, it took me 10 months of searching before I found someone who is kind and caring — just such a sweet guy. But lately, I've been frustrated with the dynamics of our relationship.

I work seven days a week, nearly 60 hours. He works maybe 10 hours a week. And I would say that 95% of what I make seems to be spent on him and something he needs. And I already pay every single bill that comes to the house — utilities, phone plans, groceries, etc.

I'm at my breaking point. I can't live like this anymore. The happiness seems to have been all wrung out of this relationship. It's almost starting to feel like my last relationship, just without the abuse. I've told him how I feel, and he acts like it's no big deal and that he'd just like to continue with things the way that they are. I'm not so happy anymore, but I don't know what to do because he is such a great guy. Please help me. — Very Confused Girlfriend

Dear Confused: Just because a relationship isn't abusive doesn't mean it's good, or even healthy, and a great guy wouldn't dismiss your feelings when you bring them up. But I have to ask why you started paying all his bills in the first place. It sounds as though you're exhibiting co-dependent tendencies, which is understandable. Being in an abusive relationship can decimate a person's self-esteem, and while your ex may be gone, the trauma he inflicted is not. I encourage you to call the National Domestic Violence Hotline (800-799-7233) for referral to counseling services and other resources that can help you begin to heal from the abuse you've suffered.

Dear Annie: Two years ago, I lost a grandchild unexpectedly. As you can imagine, our family was traumatized and needed love and support from family and friends. Several friends were there every step with a listening ear, and even some acquaintances went out of their way to offer support. The only person who never reached out was my sister-in-law. We were never close, but we were cordial. Over time, I became more and more resentful of her lack of empathy. On the few occasions when we find ourselves in the same place, I cannot hide my angry and hurt feelings and just put on a happy face.

I want her to know how her behavior has affected me, but I don't think it would matter to her. How do I just let go and pretend? — Can't Pretend

Dear Can't Pretend: Some people are not comfortable expressing empathy when someone passes away. It's hurtful. It's selfish. It adds insult to the worst kind of injury. Your anger is justified, and your sister-in-law has done nothing to earn your forgiveness. Forgive her anyway. You need to for the sake of your mental health and healing. Accept that, for whatever reason, she has some emotional limitations. Let the grace shown to you by friends, other family members and acquaintances make up for the lack of grace shown by her. I am deeply sorry for your loss.

Marriage takes two

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I have been married to my wife for just over two years. We each have a child from a previous marriage, and we have a child together. A few months ago, she started accusing me of distancing myself from her. I was confused by this, as I truly hadn't intended to. I thought everything had been going OK.

Well, it turns out that she was the one trying to distance herself. She told me last month that she wants to take some time apart to figure out if she still wants to be with me.

I've tried talking to her about it to find out why she wants space. She's given me a variety of different reasons. I've heard her out, acknowledged her concerns and offered solutions — but they're never enough. She just comes up with more excuses. She has also mentioned that men flirt with her at work and she enjoys the attention.

She says she's still making up her mind about our marriage, but I feel like I can read the writing on the wall and know where this is headed. I'm absolutely heartbroken. Any advice you could offer would be absolutely welcome. — So Very Lost

Dear Lost: Marriages can survive almost anything if both partners are willing to put in the work. But your wife isn't meeting you halfway, or even part of the way. In fact, she seems intent on heading the opposite direction. Keep focusing on what you can control, and if she ultimately decides she wants out, know that you did all you could. By the sound of it, you're a loving, caring partner, and if your wife can't appreciate that, someone else will, down the line. But I am sorry for your heartache in the meantime.

Dear Annie: I am a 49-year-old woman, and my youngest brother is 45. Our mom passed away very young. I was 8; he was 4. Our dad was an auto factory worker who spent long days working hard to support five kids on his own. A lot of our household duties fell on my shoulders. I was not the oldest, but I guess you could say I was the only one that cared about the "true" meaning of family. My dad said he knew that he could always count on me.

Because of this, my youngest brother has always looked at me kind of like a mom. Except lately, his behavior has changed, and he only seems to want me around or even care about me when he needs money. I am a union asphalt road worker, and although I make a great wage, I don't want to just give it away. But when I say no, he flips out and tells me he will be hungry and it's my fault. I don't want my brother hungry, so I give him food instead of money, but it's never enough. Any suggestions? — Brother's Keeper

Dear Brother's Keeper: Never do for others what they can just as easily do for themselves. The best way to truly help your brother in the long term is to quit "helping" him in these surface-level ways now. He's an adult and capable of caring for himself. By detaching with love, you'll give him the chance to find that out.

MUSIC

First of all, you can start calling our home town Indiana's Music City in every conversation or family gathering you have. We need to make it part of our identity and personality right here at home. And we need all our out-of-town friends to know it and believe it. So talk it up!

The second thing you can do, and this is a big one, is you can support local live music by going to shows and enjoying the music scene. We have a lot of venue owners who are making big investments in hiring live musicians, and they need us to support them so they can continue.

As I write this several new venues are catching "Music City Fever" joining the live music scene. Richwood on the River is having regular music events. Rivertown Grill just got their liquor license and is on the cusp of hosting shows. The Central Hotel and Bar just started having music last week. And word is the old Drake Bar is not far behind.

And this is all on top of the many committed venues who have been doing it for years, like Thomas Family Winery, Off-Broadway Taproom, Red Bicycle Hall, Mad Paddle, The Lighthouse, The Broadway and Riverboat Inn. All these venues need our patronage if they are going to succeed long term.

Now I know some of you may not like the bar scene, and that's fine, of course. But you can still be a part of the music scene. Mad Paddle has more of a restaurant vibe, and Red Bicycle Hall is more of a concert hall or theater. Thomas Family Winery feels more like a family living room. And heck, the House of Jane Songwriter sessions are in a barber shop!

The point is, no matter your age, no matter your preferences around bars and taverns, no matter your preferred style of music, there is something happening in the Madison music scene that will amaze and delight you, if you just get out and go. This is my plea to you. Support the music. Enjoy the show. Be a part of transforming Madison into Indiana's Music City. Thanks.

HOT TIP OF THE WEEK

We have a couple of fun double-dips this week. On Thursday you can see Tyrone Cotton with Jimmy Davis at House of Jane early, and then a bit later see Tyrone again at Off-Broadway. On Friday John Ford is doing Live Lunch at Lytle Park, then you can catch him in the evening at Off-Broadway. Also on Friday, the ever-popular Rumors Band will be rocking Mad Paddle, so grab your friends and enjoy that one. On Saturday there is music pretty much everywhere, so take your pick. And then mark your calendar for NEXT Wednesday, July 21, for Snaps for Sinners at Off-Broadway. If you've never seen the Snaps guys, you owe it to yourself. Trust me!

Charlie Rohlfing is a retired advertising man and partner in The Red Bicycle Hall music venue. Look for his distinctive fedora bobbing above the crowd, anywhere live local music is happening.

Depending on how The Farm conducts its events in 2020, Smith can apply for a renewal of the conditional use permit in 2022 with an expanded schedule of every third Saturday from March through October.

Neighbors reiterated that North K Road is too narrow for the crowds that are likely to show up at The Farm and that if access by firefighters and their equipment or ambulances is restricted by heavy traffic they could be the ones paying the price should there be a fire or injury on their property. They said a location on a wider state highway would be a better option.

Board member Rick Ferris, a farm manager and the only BZA member who resides in the buffer zone, said it's time to give The Farm a chance, especially if the organizers are truly willing to follow the city's guidelines and "do what you can do to be a good neighbor."

"We could live with the past and apply previous testimony but I applaud this group for coming forward and trying to do the right thing ... but it is important that the rules be followed," Ferris said. "I'd like to come see it in person. It's one thing to hear testimony but it's another thing to lay your eyes on it ... Madison wants to grow business — we're pro-business — and I live in the buffer zone, too, so I understand the concern about emergency services."

"Once you get a bad reputation it's hard to get a good reputation back," said Baldwin, explaining that the remainder of this year is The Farm's opportunity to repair it's reputation with the BZA and its neighbors. "Your reputation in the past was trashed with civil incidents ... from my viewpoint you are trying to get your reputation back and it's going to be very, very hard."

Baldwin said one way to make that easier is to make use of the city's staff in the future. He noted the people at city hall are not there to punish people but to help educate them on proper procedures to head off problems ahead of time.

"If you need advice, come talk to the staff," he said.

PACE

Dick Goodman, president of the Madison Board of Aviation, said negotiations are currently underway between the airport and a helicopter operation that could "bring 13 high-paying jobs to the community."

• Courtney reported that work has begun on a long overdue program to improve the city's infrastructure for drinking water.

"That has not been done in 20 years," he said, noting it will be a significant project involving restoration of the city's water tanks and replacement of much of the water distribution system. "It's going to be very expensive. We're going through the cost process now as well as a cost study for our trash services."

He said the city is applying for a $5 million grant with the State Water Infrastructure Fund (SWIF) involving two elements — drinking water and creating a long-term flood mitigation plan.

Courtney referenced recent flash flooding on North Walnut Street and other areas along Crooked Creek as well as flooding that occurred in 2015. "It will keep happening and damage will continue to be severe if we don't embark on some comprehensive plan for future flood mitigation," he said.

Courtney said he is working with the Army Corp of Engineers to complete a plan that will work toward building infrastructure to mitigate damage from future floods.

Fitness center, exterior locker room latest improvements at MCHS

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

Madison Consolidated High School's athletic complex is undergoing construction for the second year in a row due to the addition of a new locker room at Cub Field and a fitness area in between the baseball and softball fields.

Unlike last year's project — a new turf field and scoreboards on the football field — these projects will not be ready by the time the school season opens in mid-August. But according to Madison Athletic Director Joe Bronkella, the $2 million project will provide a boost to the overall athletic program.

The fitness center, in particular, is something that coaches in all programs have been lobbying for for nearly two decades. The current weight room at Madison has been upgraded several times over the past 10 years but it still falls far short of most other schools in the region, even those with enrollments smaller than Madison.

The new fitness center will not only feature traditional weights and training stations, but will also have more up-to-date machines that will help athletes train in a more well-rounded way.

"The fitness center will impact a large number of kids throughout the day, including all of our sports programming," Bronkella said. "Especially the cardio equipment for our teams, which is something that we have really never had."

Over at the football field, the school is building a new exterior locker room right on the site of the former concession stand, in between the baseball field and the track. In addition, the large fieldhouse, that housed restrooms and batting cages, is being renovated into a more well-rounded facility that will also include a golf simulator.

"The exterior locker room and red building renovations will be a huge improvement for our fans, officials, home teams that utilize that facility, as well as visitors," Bronkella said. "The new concession stand is a very good renovation and is much-needed. Also, the golf instruction room will be very impactful for both golf programs and possible educational classes."

Both projects are expected to be completed by Nov. 30, too late to impact the fall sports season. But they should both be operational by winter.

The two new building projects are just the latest in a string of investments that Madison has made to improve its athletic facilities over the past few years with several more being planned. A new pressbox at the football field is in the works and the baseball field is expected to receive upgrades to lighting and drainage, among other things. These upgrades join those the football field and gymnasium made in recent years.

Toronto Blue Jays star Vladimir Guerrero Jr. kisses the bat after winning MVP honors at the Major League Baseball All-Star Game in Denver on Tuesday.

Guerrero Jr. shines as All-Star

BY ARNIE STAPLETON

DENVER — Vladimir Guerrero Jr. admired his 468-foot screamer for a moment before bouncing into his triumphant home run trot.

Quick out of the park, slow out of the box, Guerrero became the youngest All-Star Game MVP after driving in a pair of runs in the American League's 5-2 win Tuesday night.

"Dad, this is for you," Guerrero said in Spanish when he was presented with the Ted Williams All-Star Game MVP award.

He kissed the trophy — a clear baseball bat — held it up high and posed with it at home plate, soaking in the accomplishment, much as he did admiring his monster home run from the batter's box two hours earlier.

At 22 years, 119 days old, the Toronto Blue Jays slugger is 117 days younger than Ken Griffey Jr. was when he won the award in 1992.

Vladimir Guerrero Sr. homered off Brad Penny in the 2006 All-Star Game. The younger Guerrero's homer marked the third father-son duo to go deep in All-Star Game history, joining Griffey and his father and Bobby and Barry Bonds.

USA tops Argentina in pre-Tokyo tune-up, 108-80

BY TIM REYNOLDS
AP BASKETBALL WRITER

USA Basketball finally made it look easy again.

Kevin Durant and Bradley Beal each scored 17 points and the Americans took control from the outset, beating Argentina 108-80 in Las Vegas on Tuesday to avoid what would have been the first three-game losing streak in this era of NBA players being able to represent USA Basketball on the international stage.

Zach LaVine scored 15 points for the U.S., which lost its first two games in Las Vegas to Nigeria and Australia. The Americans shot 51%, scored 33 first-quarter points to get off and running and beat Argentina for the 10th consecutive time since a loss at the 2004 Athens Olympics.

"It was better," U.S. coach Gregg Popovich said. "Bit by bit, every day, I hope."

Damian Lillard scored 13 points and Bam Adebayo finished with 12 points, five assists and five rebounds for the U.S.

"Just really locked in," Adebayo said.

Luis Scola, set to play in the Olympics for a fifth time, scored 16 points in 19 minutes for Argentina. Nicolas Laprovittola scored 13, Facundo Campazzo had 12 and Gabriel Deck added 10.

"It's not a big deal," Argentina's Luca Vildoza said. "It's only a loss."

The U.S. played with only eight members of the Olympic team. Jayson Tatum was held out with right knee soreness and will be day-to-day going forward, USA Basketball said. The Americans also will be without Khris Middleton, Jrue Holiday and Devin Booker until at least this weekend because of the NBA Finals.

The back-to-back losses to start the U.S. team's stay in Las Vegas raised the possibility that the Americans might lose three in a row with NBA players for the first time.

If those thoughts truly existed, they didn't last for long.

"Our biggest thing is we have to realize it's not the NBA and Coach Pop keeps re-emphasizing that every single day," Beal said. "It's way more physical. Guys are smarter. These guys have been playing together for five-, 10-plus years. So they have the experience and the chemistry and we're trying to develop that in a short period of time."

It was 15-4 USA before the game was even 3 1/2 minutes old, the lead was as much as 17 later in the opening quarter — the biggest leads for the Americans in the first two games were 10 against Nigeria and 11 against Australia — and the outcome was never really in doubt.

Alonso bests Mancini, Ohtani for 2nd straight HR Derby title

BY RONALD BLUM
AP BASEBALL WRITER

DENVER — Pete Alonso's words were as bold as his home runs.

"I'm the best power hitter on the planet," the New York Mets first baseman proclaimed after winning his second straight Home Run Derby. "Being able to showcase that and put on a fun display on for the fans is truly a dream come true for me."

Alonso danced to the title, besting Shohei Ohtani, Trey Mancini and Juan Soto on a night of record long balls in the thin Rocky Mountain air of Coors Field.

He hit 74 total home runs and beat Mancini 23-22 in the final round Monday, joining Ken Griffey Jr. (1998-99) and Yoenis Céspedes (2013-14) in winning consecutive titles.

Alonso earned $1 million — more than his $676,775 salary. He's made $2 million in Home Run Derby winnings compared to about $1.47 million in career salary from the Mets through the end of this season.

"My parents let me stay up past my bedtime to watch this," the 26-year-old recalled. "That was one of the few nights of the year I got to stay up past of my bedtime and watch. Watch incredible feats you don't see in a regular baseball game. To be able to do back to back is really special to me."

He has a chance to match Griffey, who also won in 1994, as the only three-time champion.

Pete Alonso hit 74 total home runs and beat Mancini 23-22 in the final round Monday, joining Ken Griffey Jr. (1998-99) and Yoenis Céspedes (2013-14) in winning consecutive titles.

Batting second, Alonso trailed 22-17 after the first two minutes of the final round, then hit six homers on six swings over the first 28 seconds of his final minute.

Mancini, who returned this season from cancer treatment, was the sentimental favorite, while Alonso was the most animated of the eight sluggers as the longball competition returned after a one-year absence caused by the coronavirus pandemic.

With custom bats in the Mets' royal blue and orange, and matching shoes and batting gloves, Alonso was a human bobblehead, nodding on beat in the batter's box as he stepped out and danced. He motioned with his arms to whip up fans during a timeout.

Alonso hit a first-round record 35 dingers, seven more than Josh Hamilton in 2008 at the original Yankee Stadium, and topped Kansas City's Salvador Pérez with 27. Alonso, batting second, beat Soto 16-15 in the second round. Alonso's longest drive of the night traveled 514 feet.

Mancini missed the 2020 season while undergoing chemotherapy for stage 3 colon cancer, treatment he finished last Sept. 21 at Johns Hopkins Hospital. The 29-year-old Baltimore Orioles first baseman hit .256 with 16 homers and 55 RBIs going into the All-Star break. His oncologist, Dr. Nilo Azad, threw out the ceremonial first pitch at Camden Yards before the Orioles' hosted the Chicago White Sox last Friday night.

"It was incredible, especially after the last year-and-a-half," Mancini said.

Mancini knocked out Colorado's Trevor Story 13-12 in the second round, hitting second and advancing with a drive to center. Mancini knew topping Alonso would be difficult.

"He's hitting balls over 500 feet with ease. It didn't seem like he got too tired and I got pretty gassed in that last bonus round," Mancini said. "He's a beast out there."

Soto thrilled the crowd of 49,048 with a 520-foot homer, the longest derby drive in the Statcast era, topping 513 feet the New York Yankees' Aaron Judge in 2017 at Miami. Before Statcast, the Chicago Cubs' Sammy Sosa was said to have hit one 524 feet at Milwaukee in 2002, clearing Bernie Brewer's slide.

Mark McGwire had the longest ball in the 1998 Derby at mile-high Coors, a 510-footer.

Ohtani, the Los Angeles Angels sensation set to start on the mound and hit leadoff as designated hitter for the American League in Tuesday night's All-Star Game, started slowly but forced two rounds of tiebreakers with Soto before losing 31-28 in the second round.

They were tied 22-all after regulation and 28 apiece following the first tiebreaker. Soto homered on all three swings of the next tiebreak, and Ohtani grounded out on his first swing.

"It was fun, but it was exhausting," Ohtani said through a translator. "The last 30 seconds of both the first round and the tiebreaking round were really exhausting."

Ohtani will become's first two-way All-Star.

"I'm just going to get a lot of sleep, as much as I can," he said.

Mancini won the first round 24-23 over Oakland's Matt Olson, who hit a deep foul on his final swing.

"He's a good dude," Olson said. "To be able to battle the way he battled and come back and perform the way he has this year says a lot about him, his grit and his toughness."

Story defeated Texas' Joey Gallo 20-19 when Gallo popped out on his last swing.

"It is tiring, for sure, but it was a lot of fun for the first time," Gallo said.

Pirates draft Louisville's Davis at No. 1

Leiter to Texas, Southridge star Montgomery goes 22nd to White Sox

BY JAKE SEINER
AP BASEBALL WRITER

The Pittsburgh Pirates opened the amateur draft with a Louisville slugger.

That freed up the Texas Rangers to grab another famous baseball name at No. 2.

The Pirates selected Louisville catcher Henry Davis and the Rangers grabbed Vanderbilt pitcher Jack Leiter — son of big league All-Star Al Leiter — with the first two picks of Sunday night's draft, the first held as part of All-Star weekend.

"Fired up," said Davis, wearing a Pirates hat and jersey moments after his on-stage introduction by Commissioner Rob Manfred. "Ready to go, ready to get to work. Super excited."

Manfred announced the choices from Denver's Bellco Theater. Major League Baseball moved the draft from its long-standing June slot to July's All-Star festivities in an effort to better showcase its future stars.

Davis has big power and an even bigger arm, throwing out 46% of would-be basestealers to become a finalist for the Buster Posey Award as college baseball's best defensive catcher.

He batted .370 and led the Cardinals with 15 homers, and his .482 on-base percentage was best in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"I want to win, a competitor," Davis said. "I'm going to do everything I can to help this organization get where it needs to be."

The Rangers grabbed Leiter with the second pick, taking a right-hander with a mid-90s fastball and two overpowering breaking pitches. His repertoire could play near the top of a big league rotation. He was 11-4 with a 2.13 ERA with the Commodores, including a no-hitter against South Carolina, and struck out 179 in 110 innings.

Leiter watched the draft at home with his parents. Al Leiter, who pitched 19 seasons in the majors, said he was elated and "kind of weepy" hearing his son's name called.

"It's really hard to put into words," Jack Leiter said. "I'm just so happy I was able to have my family and friends and people that care about me all here to celebrate with."

This was Texas' first pick under first-year general manager Chris Young, a longtime big league pitcher who came to the organization determined to help the farm system better develop pitching. Leiter was at the top of the Rangers' board.

"Jack is someone we've zeroed in for a while," Young said. "He fits everything we're trying to accomplish as an organization."

Leiter's Vanderbilt teammate, right-hander Kumar Rocker, was taken 10th overall by the New York Mets. Rocker was once considered a candidate to go first overall but slid down draft boards following an inconsistent spring.

Colson Montgomery, a baseball and basketball star at Southridge High School in Huntingburg, Indiana, went 22nd overall to the Chicago White Sox. Montgomery led the Raiders to the Class 3A baseball state championship and to the 2A basketball regional title, beating Southwestern in the championship game.

Montgomery had signed to play baseball at Indiana University and said he was also going to walk-on to the basketball team, but is now expected to sign with the White Sox.

After MLB slimmed the draft from 40 rounds to five last year in response to the coronavirus pandemic, this year's event will go 20 rounds spread over three days.

The draft opened Sunday night with the first 36 selections. Fans were allowed to watch the event in person for the first time, and a smattering of onlookers booed loudly each time Manfred took the stage. Previous drafts were held at MLB Network's studio in Secaucus, New Jersey, which only had room for media and small groups of friends and family.

Fans stood and cheered when Davis' name was announced. He hugged friends and family before making his way to the stage, where he was handed a Pirates hat and jersey and shook hands with Manfred.

The Pirates picked first overall for the first time since taking Gerrit Cole in 2011, by far the most successful of their four previous No. 1 selections. Their other top picks were infielder Jeff King (1986) and right-handers Kris Benson (1996) and Bryan Bullington (2002).

In a year without a consensus top pick, Pittsburgh general manager Ben Cherington said his club decided on Davis on Saturday night. His scouts were impressed not just by Davis' abilities, but also his eagerness to learn and hunger to improve.

"He checks a lot of boxes," Cherington said. "We've had a lot of fun getting to know him."

The first pick has a slot value of an $8.42 million signing bonus. The deadline for players to sign is Aug. 1 at 5 p.m. EDT.

The Detroit Tigers went with Oklahoma high school pitcher Jackson Jobe at No. 3, a year after taking Arizona State slugger Spencer Torkelson with the top pick.

A uniform opinion: All-Star duds don't draw All-Star reviews

BY PAT GRAHAM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Fernando Tatis Jr., Aaron Judge, Nolan Arenado and the rest of the All-Stars certainly got needled over their new threads.

As the American League was rolling toward a 5-2 win in their all-blue ensemble Tuesday night at Coors Field, fans on social media were having a field day, taking swings at uniforms that certainly weren't in vogue.

They weren't the only ones, either.

"We can do better. We can do better, man," White Sox shortstop Tim Anderson said. "We need the players' input next time."

The AL sported outfits that reminded some of jumpsuits or pajamas. The NL version wasn't much better — an all-white production that had many commenting they looked, well, bland.

No classic birds-on-a-bat design for the St. Louis Cardinals, no sweet script for the Dodgers. No brown pinstripes on the shirts for the Padres, no recognizable "NY" logo displayed prominently on the hat for the Yankees.

Nowhere close.

"MLB should just let the players wear their own uniforms instead of these slow pitch softball ones," Milwaukee Brewers pitcher Brett Anderson posted on Twitter.

Tatis, one of the flashiest players in the majors, tried to make his own improvements. The Padres shortstop accessorized with pink shoes and matching sleeve on his arm.

All-Star Game MVP Vladimir Guerrero Jr. was able to stand out, too — for his bat, not his attire, thanks to a 468-foot homer into the thin Rocky Mountain air.

All eyes were on Shohei Ohtani, dull uniform or not. He was the main attraction as he became the first All-Star to be picked as a pitcher and a position player.

What the All-Stars were wearing, however, didn't exactly draw All-Star reviews.

This bordered more on fashion faux pas than trendy. In fact, the only thing trending was all the criticism.

Rather than familiar logos and names, there were three-letter abbreviations on the jerseys for what team they represented.

Bring back the rainbow of colors, many said, and let players wear their own club's uniforms. That was a big part of the game's charm, they maintained.

Or next time, maybe even ask for fashion tips from the players.

"I'm a big fan of each team wearing their own," White Sox closer Liam Hendriks said after earning the save as the AL won its eighth straight All-Star Game. "Don't get me wrong, I love the uniformity, I don't mind the little stars on the back, but for me, this year specifically, it would have been nice."

ALL-STAR

Guerrero crushed a slider from Milwaukee's Corbin Burnes in the third inning that almost cleared the left field bleachers at cavernous Coors Field and gave the AL a 2-0 lead.

NL shortstop Fernando Tatis Jr. immediately put his glove on his head and slowly turned around to watch the ball leave the yard.

"Wow," Tatis said. "It was a moonshot. It was something impressive. He's been doing it all year. Why not show it off here?"

The 6-foot-2, 250-pound Guerrero has 28 homers in 2021.

Tatis was mic'd up for the third inning and he marveled at the drive, saying, "That was a bomb. ... He should have admired it a little bit more. It's the All-Star Game, boy. Have fun."

That, he did.

Guerrero rocketed a comebacker near NL starter Max Scherzer in the first inning, just missing the three-time Cy Young Award winner. After he was thrown out at first, Guerrero jogged through the infield and offered Scherzer a bear hug.

"Basically at the Home Run Derby yesterday we had a conversation and he said 'Hey take it easy on me tomorrow.' That's what he told me and after the line drive I just wanted to give him a hug," Guerrero said.

He wasn't as generous with Burnes. His homer was the longest at the All-Star Game since Statcast began tracking in 2015.

And it's the longest by an astounding 58 feet. The previous best was Kris Bryant's 410-foot shot in 2016. It was also the 200th homer in All-Star history.

"Ever since I was a kid, I've been thinking about this moment," said Guerrero, who also had a run-scoring groundout in the fifth that made it 3-0. "All my life I've worked hard and thank God it's happening right now."

Asked about 45 minutes after the game if he'd heard from his father, Guerrero said, "I haven't checked my phone yet."

It was surely blowing up, just like his big homer on baseball's ultimate launching pad.

USA

"The USA played great," Argentina coach Sergio Hernandez said. "They played more aggressive defense than they had the last two games."

The Americans held a 58-42 lead at the half when Durant beat the buzzer with an 18-footer, a shot that Draymond Green was celebrating before the ball even swished through the net.

"We're not going to make shots all the time," Durant said in a televised halftime interview. "But if we continue to guard the way we are, it'll start to turn for us on offense. ... When we keep the ball in front and we get stops and rebounds, then we pretty much can play with a clean slate on the offensive side of the ball."

The U.S. won the rebound battle 40-34, committed only nine turnovers and held Argentina to 31% shooting — 9 for 29 — from 3-point range.

"Today we got better," Beal said. "Still a lot we can improve on, but we're moving in the right direction."

TIP-INS

Argentina: Campazzo was shaken up late in the first quarter after taking a hard screen, but was able to eventually return to the game. ... Argentina went 0-3 in Las Vegas, losing 87-84 in its opener against Australia on a buzzer-beating 3-pointer by Patty Mills and then falling 94-71 to Nigeria on Monday.

USA: The Americans used all 15 of their available players. ... Kevin Love, who played only 3:01 in the in the Nigeria game and didn't play against Australia, was among the first-quarter subs on Tuesday. ... Even after the losses to Nigeria and Australia, FanDuel Sportsbook had the Americans as 18.5-point favorites entering the game.

DOUBLING UP

The U.S. Olympic women's team begins taking the stage in Las Vegas on Wednesday, starting with the WNBA All-Star Game. The U.S. men and women both play Australia on Friday, before the men close their Las Vegas stay on Sunday against Spain and the women play Nigeria. The American teams will fly together to Tokyo on Monday.

POP TALK

Popovich is friends with Hernandez, and the two have spoken often during their stay in Las Vegas, and Hernandez said "today was a special day" as he coached against one of his idols. Argentina assistant coaches Silvio Santander and Maxi Seigorman have joined some of those postgame chats in Vegas with Popovich as well. "Pop is a teacher for everyone. And an inspiration," Argentine officials wrote on the team's Twitter account while posting a photo of one of the get-togethers.

Indiana DNR begins brown trout rearing program

BY SPECIAL TO THE COURIER

The Indiana DNR is expanding its inland trout program to include rearing brown trout in-house at state hatcheries.

In June, Indiana DNR Division of Fish & Wildlife officials received nearly 2,500 brown trout from the Ohio DNR. Most of those trout were stocked into streams in northern Indiana, including Pigeon River, Little Elkhart River, and Solomon Creek, but 400 were held back at Curtis Creek Trout Rearing Station to develop as broodstock. These are adult trout used for egg production. Once mature, the adult trout will produce enough fertile eggs to meet the demands of the new rearing program.

Indiana has not had its own brown trout program since 1985.

"There has been a great deal of angler demand for brown trout here in northern Indiana," said Matt Horsley, Indiana DNR fisheries biologist. "Hopefully now we can meet those demands with our own source."

Indiana has not had its own brown trout program since 1985. All recent brown trout stockings have either been through privately funded stockings, fish acquired from federal hatcheries or partnerships with hydroelectric companies.

"Hatchery staff were instrumental in making this happen," Horsley said. "An opportunity arose, and the hatcheries were able to step up and quickly adjust their current programs to accommodate new fish."

Indiana DNR anticipates the first lot of brown trout raised solely within Indiana hatcheries to hit streams by April 2024.

Judge questions treatment of suspended horse trainer Baffert

BY LARRY NEUMEISTER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — A New York judge was sympathetic Monday to horse trainer Bob Baffert's claims that his May suspension by the New York Racing Association — after Kentucky Derby winner Medina Spirit failed a postrace drug test — was unconstitutional.

U.S. District Judge Carol Bagley Amon at a Brooklyn hearing repeatedly pressed a lawyer for the racing association to explain why the suspension was issued before Baffert was given a chance to defend himself.

Henry Greenberg, arguing on behalf of the racing association, said Baffert will get a hearing after the association announces the length of his suspension by Aug. 11.

"Isn't that a little too late?" the judge asked, noting that the duration will be announced months after he was suspended. "The problem I have, counsel, is that he was suspended and it's up in the air."

She said the racing association attacked his credibility as it issued the suspension, but never gave him the chance to speak on his own behalf about what happened.

"How does that comply with due process?" the judge asked.

At another point, Amon said: "You just sent him a letter saying, 'You're out,' with no due process whatsoever."

Greenberg repeatedly said the NYRA, which operates Belmont Park, Aqueduct and Saratoga Race Course, took the action to protect the integrity of the sport.

He said the association had to act fast because the Belmont Stakes, the third prong of horse racing's Triple Crown, was fast approaching in early June.

The lawyer noted that the Kentucky Derby test was the fifth time in the past year that a horse trained by Baffert tested positive for drugs.

"Rarely in the history of the sport has there been such a confluence of drug positives involving so prominent a trainer," association lawyers wrote in court papers.

In Baffert's lawsuit last month seeking to get the suspension lifted, the Hall of Famer contended he was suspended without "any prior notice" and was not told the duration or terms of the suspension or any New York state law or regulation he might have violated.

After hearing arguments from both sides, Amon did not immediately rule.

Arguing on Baffert's behalf, attorney W. Craig Robertson III said it was unfair of the racing association to suspend his client without the completion of an investigation into the circumstances surrounding what he called the "alleged test" on Medina Spirit.

Robertson said it was possible that traces of betamethasone were found in the horse's system as a result of an ointment applied to the horse to treat a skin rash three weeks before the race. The unregulated ointment, he said, contained betamethasone.

Churchill Downs suspended Baffert for two years after an additional drug test of Medina Spirit confirmed betamethasone in the horse's system. Baffert cannot enter any horses in the Kentucky Derby or other races at the storied Louisville track through the spring of 2023.

Robertson contended that the New York suspension would be the "death knell" to Baffert's training business because New York's Saratoga Race Course, which reopens Thursday, is a pivotal stop for a young horse destined for greatness.

He said a top horse farm in Kentucky had already taken two prize horses from Baffert's care and another producer of elite horses was considering finding another trainer if Baffert cannot enter horses in New York races.

Outside court, Baffert and his lawyers declined comment after the hearing.

Jobe was expected to be the first high school pitcher drafted after going 9-0 with a 0.13 ERA at Heritage Hall. He has a deep pitch mix, including a slider that was considered among the best in the draft class.

The AL East-leading Boston Red Sox picked fourth and selected slick-fielding shortstop Marcelo Mayer. The left-handed hitter had been the favorite to go No. 1 overall after drawing comparison to Dodgers star Corey Seager.

"I did see it coming," Mayer said of his slide to the Red Sox. "I knew they were high on me. I'm just super blessed to be part of the organization."

Mayer hit 14 homers his senior year at Eastlake High School in California, one shy of the school record set by 2000 No. 1 pick Adrian Gonzalez. Marcelo batted .392 with 45 RBIs and 46 runs.

The Kansas City Royals turned in the night's first true surprise when they reached for Connecticut pitcher Frank Mozzicato with the seventh pick. The 18-year-old left-hander threw four consecutive no-hitters this spring, but was projected by most experts as a fit for early in the second round.

Among the loudest cheers came when the hometown Rockies took Pennsylvania high school outfielder Benny Montgomery, a speedy player with a chance to add strength to his 6-foot-4 frame.

Another notable name came off the board at No. 25 when the Oakland Athletics selected California high school shortstop Max Muncy. He shares no relation to the Los Angeles Dodgers slugger with the same name, but they have plenty else in common. They share a birthday on Aug. 25, and both were drafted by Oakland — the elder Muncy was a fifth round pick by the A's in 2012.

The Houston Astros won't pick until the third round for the second straight year as punishment for their infamous sign-stealing scandal.

Busch brothers closing in on Allisons' record for Cup wins

BY CHARLES ODUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAMPTON, Ga. — The Busch brothers are banging on the Allisons' rear bumper for the top spot on the list of NASCAR Cup Series wins by siblings.

On Sunday, however, the sibling rivalry between Kurt and Kyle Busch was the story. Thanks to Kurt's win over runner-up Kyle at Atlanta Motor Speedway, each has two wins in the four Cup races featuring one-two finishes by the brothers.

That was a cause for celebration for older brother Kurt, who climbed out of his car and yelled, "Hell yeah, we beat Kyle!"

It was a sore subject for Kyle. Kurt said his younger brother dropped by victory lane to "do the Kyle Busch grumpy."

Neither likes losing to the other. It may be especially difficult for Kyle, even though he's had more NASCAR success.

"It's a little-brother syndrome," Kurt said. "I'm an older brother. I don't know what it is to be the younger one. It's a genuine feel of I'm not trying to push his buttons, but I know that as we've gotten older, the stats have stacked in his favor, and I've come to agreement with that in my own mind."

Kurt predicted his brother would move past his hurt feelings in a few days. It might help Kyle to be reminded that he and Kurt are closing in on that record for most Cup Series wins by brothers. Bobby Allison (84) and Donnie Allison (10) combined for 94 Cup wins, the record for brothers. The Busch brothers now have 92 — 59 from Kyle and 33 from Kurt.

Kurt, 42, wants to make sure he's still racing when the record falls.

"It needs to get done here in the next year or two while I'm still driving," he said. "They still have that record, but Kyle and I are out here finishing one-two. We can chip away at it and try to get that done."

The last time Kurt beat Kyle in a one-two finish, in Kentucky in 2019, it cost Kurt a seat on Kyle's plane ride back home to Charlotte. On Sunday, Kurt knew he should arrange his own transportation.

"It's only about four hours back to Charlotte, so it's not too big of a deal," Kurt said. "But I'm pretty sure Kyle has already taken off."

Kurt still smiled. He had something better than a ride home.

"We've got the trophy," he said. "I ain't worried about it."

Indeed, the Busch brothers' sibling rivalry burns strong.

"I'll tell you, the adrenaline gets going, the childhood memories come back," Kurt said. "The best of the best in this business is in my mirror, and yet I can giggle to myself sometimes and go, 'Yeah, I taught him everything he knows.' "

Kyle gave credit to his big brother as "definitely better than us today."

"I thought I had him, and I did, but racing just didn't play out for us today."

Kurt said the rivalry can be intense.

"It's an awesome, genuine battle between the two of us," he said. "We've had some friction over the years, but as we get older we've gotten slightly a bit wiser and we've raced each other with a ton of respect on track to almost be teammates, even though we race for different organizations."

The Busch brothers swept the Atlanta weekend races.

Kyle won the Xfinity Series race Saturday, his fifth win in five tries this season in the second-tier series, and said he doesn't plan to return to the series next season.
